A Global Treaty Against Women's Freedom

The Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) is a UN treaty that would impact every aspect of life and place Americans under the supervision of a UN committee of "experts." Under the guise of "eliminating discrimination against women," it would hand over women's freedom to make personal decisions – such as family duties, parental rights, religious exercise, education and employment – to government agents and an unaccountable UN committee.

CEDAW obligates countries to change laws and cultural attitudes on "stereotypes." It threatens our freedoms of religion and association by intruding in our families, schools, workplaces, religious institutions, social groups, and political representation – even private behavior such as household and childcare chores.

CEDAW would limit Americans' right to determine our laws and culture. It may harm our national security by subjecting its "gender neutral" dictates onto our military by requiring quotas and invalidating protections for women. It will invite frivolous lawsuits.

CEDAW is Anti-Mothers Day!

- ◆ It criticized Ireland for the Catholic Church’s influence on attitudes and state policy.
- ◆ It reprimanded Belarus for celebrating Mothers Day.
- ◆ It scolded the Netherlands for not increasing the number of women in government, academic, private and business sectors.
- ◆ It told Italy to revise school textbooks to reflect non-stereotypical gender roles.
- ◆ It told Armenia to combat the stereotype of “women in the noble role of mother.”
- ◆ It criticized Slovenia because “less than 30 per cent of children under three years of age ... were in formal day care.”
- ◆ It urged Finland to promote equal sharing of domestic and family tasks between women and men.
