CWA of Georgia Decries Supreme Court's Assault on Traditional Marriage

Marietta, GA. – Concerned Women for America (CWA) of Georgia is deeply saddened by the Supreme Court's decision to overturn the ban on same-sex marriage. The question before the Court was very specific, so it should have been easy for them, yet they fumbled it. Does the Constitution require the redefinition of marriage? The answer is obviously no it does not.

"Today is a very dark day for our country," says State Director Tanya Ditty. "The Biblical view of marriage was mocked by not only the highest court in our land, but by the deafening applause from the highest leaders of our government."

Once again, the Court takes into its own hands matters of policy, which are left, by the authority of the Constitution, to the providence of the legislative branch. In acting as a super legislature, so to speak, the Supreme Court itself violated the constitutional parameters that were set in place for the preservation of liberty.

"It is a sad day in America when five unelected justices think themselves so powerful they dare overturn the votes of millions of Americans, including over 75 percent of Georgians, who went to the voting booth to preserve marriage as it had been understood throughout history, the union between one man and one woman," states Tanya Ditty. "We have much work to do to reestablish a pro-marriage, pro-family culture in our nation, but we embrace the challenges ahead, knowing that we stand on solid ground when we say that marriage, as intended by God, is the best model for strong, healthy, stable families that serve as the only secure foundation for our society's future."

Concerned Women for America is the nation's largest public policy women's organization.
