Women: The Chief Health Officers of the Family

[CWA Chief Executive Officer, Penny Nance]

Hi, I'm Penny Nance, CEO of Concerned Women for America.

Did you know that American women control 80% of the health care decisions made in this country? Most of us moms routinely are the parent who take our children to the doctor, and are often the ones who make decisions for elderly relatives.

This is one of the many reasons why women have such an important stake in the outcome of the current national health care debates.

A poll done by the Washington Times and the polling company found that 57% of women disagree that a federally run health care program is what's best for my family and me.

Regardless of what you think about the Obama administration's proposals on health care, we as women need to be informed and also in prayer.

Our families count on us to be the Chief Health Officer and we must make sure our government represents our interests.

What is being decided directly impacts the future health of your family and mine.
