Child with Cerebral Palsy who could not see or speak does both after umbilical cord stem cell therapy

PRWEB, February 8, 2005

*During December 2004 the Sinclair Broadcast Group produced and aired a 5-minute video news segment concerning the promise and utility of umbilical cord stem cell therapy. The video focuses on Adam Susser and his father, prominent Florida consumer affair's attorney, Gary Susser. Adam was cortically blind and could not speak prior to receiving human umbilical cord stem cells. He now can both see and speak.

Pilot study shows umbilical cord stem cells are effective in the treatment of Cerebral Palsy in children

PRWEB, August 31, 2004 (background press release to video described, above)

San Clemente, CA -- A pilot study involving seven children with Cerebral Palsy treated with umbilical cord stem cells abroad has shown: (1) No rejection or adverse reaction issues; (2) Clinically and statistically significant improvements in a number of physical and mental functions.

During 2003 the children were treated with umbilical cord stem cells as part of a pioneering study.... Most have shown decreased spasticity and various kinds and degrees of motor skill and cognitive improvement...

One of the most spectacular responses was a young boy who was cortically blind prior to umbilical cord stem cell therapy. Five months following treatment he began to track objects with his eyes.

Just as remarkable was the response of 4-year-old little girl with microcephaly (i.e, abnormally small head size) who experienced significant head growth in the six months immediately following treatment with umbilical cord stem cells.
